The mural was designed specifically around existing windows and continues around the corner of the building, demonstrating my ability to adapt a composition to complex architectural conditions. This mural celebrates the creativity and spirit of innovation that define Silicon Valley. Inspired by technology and invention, the artwork features a microchip surrounded by flowing waves of color that create a sense of movement, energy, and imagination, reflecting the constant evolution of ideas and innovation. Working from the stakeholders' initial vision, I developed the design in two weeks. Following approval, I completed the mural installation in two weeks.

Project 3 - Midpen Media Center, Palo Alto, Public art

Project name: Tribute to The Horse In Motion

Dimensions: 5’ x 126’
Medium: hand-painted acrylic mural
Completion date: May 2025
Artist’s role: Lead artist

This 126-foot mural was inspired by Eadweard Muybridge's pioneering motion studies and their connection to the history of Palo Alto and the region. The unusual long, narrow architectural format inspired the use of Muybridge's galloping horse sequence, translated into my own graphic visual language. The design was developed in approximately two weeks and reviewed and approved through the Palo Alto Visual Arts Commission process. Installation was completed over three weeks using a scissor lift.
